COOKIE TO THE RESCUE

ALANA ROBERSON wasn't happy at all. This was especially so because it already was Thursday, and she didn't have a date for the annual dance on Saturday night. Probably she'd have to accept the invitation of Fats Morris, the pudgy pest who sat in back of her in History class, if she wanted to go at all. Actually, though, Alana didn't feel much like being at the school shindig, now that she found out that Jim had asked Cookie Smith to be his date on that very important occasion.

"That Cookie Smith!" Alana grumbled under her breath, ". . . she's got a way with Jim. Got him tied around her little finger. I'll have to break up that friendship one of these days. She's nothing but an ugly duckling, while daddy says he thinks I should be on magazine covers or in the movies with the face and figure I've got!"

Obviously, Alana didn't like Cookie, nor did she like the fact that Jim was stuck on Cookie. But, she thought, she'd accept that disgusting Fats Morris' invitation. At least she'd have a chance to snare a few dances with Jim. Maybe if she played it right, she'd even manage to get Jim to take her home. She'd leave Cookie for Fats. That might be a very funny sight.

Saturday came around, and so did Fats. Alana nearly choked when Fats came adoringly with a bunch of violets tucked in his perspiring hand. She conveniently placed them on the couch, and even more conveniently forgot they were there when she sat down right on the poor violets and crushed them. Imagine, being seen at such an important dance with Fats Morris' violets pinned to her waist! She pulled Fats toward the front door flinging a jacket over her shoulders.

"Sorry about the . . . violets, Fats. Try dandelions next time. Much more hardy, I understand!" she sneered.

They arrived at the dance just as Jim was helping Cookie from his car. Cookie had had the nerve to wear the same gown she'd worn to the last two dances. Why, it looked positively worn!

Alana knew that Cookie was right behind her in the powder room as she exclaimed to another girl standing next to her at the long mirror, "Why, my daddy's a peach. He simply insists he won't have his beautiful daughter being seen in the same seventy-five dollar gown at two dances. Family pride, you know!"

Cookie left, apparently undisturbed by the biting remarks, and Alana entered the large room where others were dancing just as Jim took Cookie's arm.

"Gosh, honey," he was saying, "You could wear the same gown a hundred times and look more beautiful in it each time. You sure are a living doll!"

"A living doll, eh?" Alana mumbled, watching them head for the punch bowl. "His compliments are ever so corny. She looks more like a walking ghoul!"

Alana couldn't stand the thought that Jim could admire such a dowdy frizzle of a girl when he had a beautiful angel like herself just waiting to be dated. One of life's little mysteries, she supposed.

"Can't he ever do anything but admire that Cookie?" Alana scowled, as Fats pulled her around the dance floor in what he must have thought was in time to the music. She couldn't keep her eyes or ears off Cookie and Jim as they danced by. She felt her foot go numb with rage, until she realized Fats was stepping on it.

She was watching them, too, when the little accident occurred. She saw Cookie accidentally drop her evening bag. Jim bent down to pick it up and Cookie did the same. The resounding thud stopped the music dead. First there was a stunned silence as the couple slumped to the floor, dazed. But, as luck would have it, Miss Franklin, the school nurse, was also at the dance, and after a quick dash to the first-aid room, was back with smelling salts and bandages.

Alana couldn't resist the crowd that gathered about Jim and Cookie later, but what she heard Cookie and Jim saying made her wish they were both still lying dazed on the dance floor. Apparently Cookie and Jim, impressed no end by Miss Franklin's skill, were discussing the nursing profession.

"Cookie," Jim was saying, smiling at the girl next to him, "You'd make a wonderful nurse, just like Miss Franklin. I'm glad you've decided to follow in her footsteps. I'm proud of you!"

Alana turned away, when Jim planted a sugar-sweet kiss on Cookie's nose.

"So now she's going to be a nurse, is she?" Alana thought, trying to devise a plot. "Another Florence Nightingale he'll consider her. Well, if it's the last thing I do, I'm going to show that Jim Barnes how sweet, kindly and efficient little Alana can be. Then maybe he'll realize that I'm around. Once that happens, he won't know what he ever saw in Cookie Smith!"

She couldn't wait until daddy got out of bed the next morning, so she could tell him what she had planned. When she saw him walking sleepily toward the kitchen, she sprang upon him and hugged him wildly.

"And to what do I owe this burst of affection from my beautiful, talented daughter, may I ask?" he questioned, knowing too well that she was about to ask him a favor.

"Daddy, dear, why don't you get back into bed? You need a rest once in a while. You work so-o-o-o hard!" Alana beamed lovingly.

Alana prepared a beautiful breakfast and served it to her astounded father on a tray as he sat, propped up, against a pillow in his bed. Then she told him her plan.

"You see, pops, it's like this. That miserable gal Cookie, the one that Jimmy Barnes is always admiring, mentioned that she wants to be a nurse, and he just gobbled it up like honey. Maybe, if I can show him what a kindly, noble, unselfish nurse I can be, he wouldn't see that Cookie for mud, and he'd begin to pay attention to me. Now all you have to do . . ."

Within ten minutes, at ten-thirty in the morning, Jim Barnes was answering his telephone. He wasn't surprised to hear Alana's voice, as she often phoned him, just to talk about nothing in particular.

"What? You say your father is deathly ill? The doctor says he must have absolute rest and excellent nursing care if he expects to live another three or four years?" Jim asked, trying to make out Alana's excited words.

"It's true, Jimmy boy! And the doctor and dad both insisted that I be his nurse, as it would be best to have me as close to him as possible, to make his last days happier. I . . . (sob) feel just dreadful! I'm . . . so lonesome, Jim . . . can't you come . . . and try to lift my spirits . . . just a l-little?" Alana cried.

Jim hung up hurriedly and phoned Cookie, with whom he had a tennis date at eleven.

"Cookie, please forgive me . . . it's an emergency. It's Alana . . . no fooling, her dad's practically on his deathbed. She's in a terrible state, and pleaded with me to bolster her courage. If I don't go, I'm afraid she'll do something . . . desperate!"

Understandingly, Cookie agreed that he must go and help poor Alana. When Jim reached the Roberson house, he found the door open, and walked in. Alana was standing before him, wringing a very moist handkerchief.

"I didn't want the bell to . . . disturb him!" she explained, in a sad-sounding whisper. "He's in bed, so terribly ill! W-would you like to . . . pay your r-respects, Jim?"

He tiptoed up the stairs behind Alana, and crept toward Mr. Roberson's room. The house seemed shrouded with gloom. When he heard the moan, he shrank back, terrified of the sound that was much like a death-rattle.

Mr. Roberson was choking out the words, "... w-water, Alana. W-water, please. Ooooooohh, my heart, my poor heart. H-hurry."

Alana ran to the bathroom for the water, cautioning Jim to remove his shoes, lest his footsteps disturb her father. He took them off carefully and placed them in front of the staircase. As he walked into the darkened room, he saw Alana's father stretched out on the bed, medicine bottles all about him. He was still moaning.

"Oooooohh, my heart. Alana, I'm . . . so terribly cold. Hot broth . . . please get me some hot broth. I feel weaker every moment!"

Alana gave a saddened look and left the room to get the broth from the kitchen downstairs.

The crash resounded throughout the house, and Alana's screech pierced the deadly silence. In a flash, both Jim and Mr. Roberson were at the foot of the staircase, trying to revive Alana, who had tripped over Jim's shoes and gone plunging downward.

"D . . . do something, boy!" her father was screaming. "She's knocked out. Call someone!"

Jim was stunned. "Cookie! She's been studying up on First Aid all this morning. She'll know what to do!" He ran to the phone to call Cookie, then stopped dead.

"Mr. R-Roberson! You're not s-sick. You're n-not dying!"

"You nincompoop!" Mr. Roberson shouted back. "It was just a trick to get you to appreciate Alana. Never mind that now . . . call that girl . . . whatever her name is . . . Cookie!"

Cookie was there within ten minutes, first aid book in one hand, and bandages and iodine in the other. Soon she revived Alana, then carefully and efficiently patched up the few scratches and bruises on Alana's aching elbows and knees.

When the excitement had died down, Mr. Roberson's relief prompted him to tell the whole story.

"But in any case, everything's fine now, thanks to Cookie," Mr. Roberson smiled. "You're really quite a young lady, Miss Nightingale."

Jim nodded. "Yep! That's my girl. I think I'm going to be very proud of her as a nurse!"

Mr. Roberson said, "I think she's a fine girl!"

And, rubbing her elbows, Alana looked up at the happy threesome, turned colors and said, ". . . and I think I'm going to be sick!"

How I envied the artists at the store where I worked! I kept wondering whether I had enough talent to get into fashion drawing.

In a few days my Art Talent Test came in the mail. I could hardly wait to get to my room alone and start the test.

I passed the test! (It wasn't hard.) They encouraged me to go on with my drawing. I'm really thrilled."

NOW, FOR PLEASURE AND PROFIT

Learn to Draw at Home

for only 20¢ a day

WOULD you invest 20¢ a day toward your security and happiness? If you like to draw, the Washington School of Art — with nearly half a century of experience in charting successful art careers for people of all ages, and in every corner of the world — now makes its famous "home classrooms in art" available to you.

Perhaps you are like former student L. E. Sikes, Jr., of Florida, who now owns his own outdoor display and lettering business. He writes, "without the training I received from the W. S. A., I would still be a clerk." Perhaps you too, dream of becoming a full time, highly paid commercial artist.

Or, perhaps you are like former student Tavi Teichman, of New Jersey, who now earns $50 a week "in spare time"; or retired business man, Joseph Votel of New York, who has found a relaxing hobby in art and soon hopes to have a "one-man show."

For those who seek to better themselves — those who want to get away from hum-drum jobs, who want to create and to express themselves — the W. S. A. Course can become an "open sesame" to a more interesting life, new friends, a satisfying hobby, or an exciting high-pay career.

Why It's Easier Than You Think to Make Money in Art

Never before has there been so great a demand for art work of all types, so many opportunities open for trained artists. The shortage of skilled professional illustrators . . . cartoonists . . . letterers . . . TV and fashion artists keeps growing because so many with genuine art ability think you have to be a "genius" to break into this field. So they miss out on a rewarding career — simply because they never receive the proper training.

Training and experience are what the W. S. A. has given to more than 100,000 students since 1914. Their success is what has made the School successful. With proper professional training you can make $100 or $200, or more per week as a free-lance or staff artist. (Top illustrators make as much as $100,000 a year!)

How You Are Trained at Home in Your Spare Time

The famous W. S. A. Course gets you started right away. You are supplied with TWO complete Artists' Outfits — everything you need to follow clear A-B-C instructions, and how-to-do-it pictures. A professional instructor gives you personal supervision; makes helpful comments and corrections on each assignment. You are thoroughly trained for top pay in commercial art, illustrating, cartooning, lettering, design, fashion and TV art. You take as little or as much time as you need for each lesson. You get the thorough training you need to make good in spare time—easily, enjoyably, right at home.

This One Course Includes Expert Instruction In:

- Commercial Art
- Magazine Illustrating
- Figure Drawing
- Cartooning
- Fashion Drawing
- Lettering
- Advertising Layout and Illustration
- Comic Strips
- TV Art
- Portrait Painting, Oil Painting, Watercolor

Plus many other branches of art
